Future Prospects:

Most social workers generally work within their master's specialty area. Social workers who specialize in social advocacy may work as public advocates, fundraisers or counselors with local nonprofit agencies or in national legislative offices.

Children and family services social workers might practice privately or work for community-based organizations. Mental health social workers help individuals, families and groups cope with psychological and interpersonal problems that affect healthy functioning, including substance abuse or other emotionally-related conditions. Healthcare social workers are employed by hospitals, clinics, home health care organizations and nursing homes to counsel patients dealing with chronic disease and disabilities.
